Just... somebody talk to me.

periwinklepanther32

Tell me something good. Somebody take a positive outlook here and tell me everything's ok.

Tell me its it's going to get better, with everything happening. My uncle gone, my best friend in the hospital, my other friend moving away, my ear trauma keeping me from the thing I love in life the most, my own mental state getting the best of me... it's all going to end, right?

I see you all have that #SupportPeri thing in your siggies. I need the support, but what if the support doesn't work? What if I can't be helped?

I'm sorry. I'm just an anxious bundle of nerves and sadness. Things are happening. I'm hiding in a different room so I can avoid them. And my ear is killing me slowly, and the medication is upsetting my stomach...

So please, just talk me through this? Please?

Oh... Oh no. I can't imagine what you're going through right now. Just know that you're creative and kind, and that I missed you when you were gone. I think we all did, but I know that every day you were gone, I checked to see if you were back. I don't want to pressure you into staying, though - I completely understand if you need another break. Just know that you have my support, along with the support of many other forumers. I'm not going to say everything's okay, because that's not true. But things will get better. It might feel like they won't, but I promise you that once you make it through this awful time in your life - and you will make it through - things will start to get better. They may not be the same as they were, but they will get better. And no matter what happens, we'll always be here for you.

Don't worry, your ear will heal and you'll get back to doing what you love! And your friend is going to get better.
You ever have one of those days--or one of those hours, where you're doing something or experience something (not necessarily whatever your ear is keeping you away from), like watching an exciting movie, looking at a nice landscape, seeing a cute animal, laughing at something really funny, or holding hands with your mom? And you forget about your bad feelings even for just a little bit? Keep moving from one of those moments to the next. It's worth it, to just keep on going.

I've been through a lot of pain too, and I know it's helped me to grow as a person, it still hurts. I know what it's like to be at the bottom of the abyss, but there's always someone who can help you. After a while, it'll get easier, but right now, just let your imagination run free to distract you from reality. That's what I do.

I'd recommend baking shows. British ones, not the american cupcake-to-death things we have. They're often quite calming.

I had a double ear infection once. The weirdest thing was my ears felt fine, but the infection cause me extreme shortness of breath, which was worse because of my asthma so I basically couldn't breathe. It sucked.

When I was 9 my best friend moved away. She lives in a military family and moves every three years. I miss her a lot and I stalk her on facebook. We'd been through a lot together. I still have her shirt, and her doll house. After she moved, I ended up becoming best friends with her sister's best friend, since when she and her sister moved we we're both left friendless. You pull through, but you will never forget them.

Oh, and don't worry about the hospital thing. Modern medicine can fix so much, it just takes time.
I was in and out of the hospital a lot when I was younger. Probably scared the heck out of my friends, but I was always back and biting in the morning. At least now I just go to the doctor a lot. Speaking of which i have an appointment tomorrow that I should probably prep for...

I'm sorry about all of that. How about you just take a few moments and think about dragons, unicorns, kitties, puppies, and rainbows. It literally helps for a few minutes, at least for me.

There's a lot of sappy quotes you hear - "if it rains, look for rainbows; if it's dark, look for stars" "even after the longest, darkest night, the sun rises" - but they never really feel encouraging during the hard time. But remember that THIS WILL STOP. There IS light waiting for you, and it WANTS to break through the barrier and sweep you up and fix your life. You are going to get through this, Peri. If you keep your head, you'll make it. A greater good always comes from something bad.
